

William C. Apgar Jr., Lecturer in Public Policy, returned to Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government (KSG) after leave to serve as Assistant Secretary of Housing at the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. He currently serves as Faculty Chair of the KSG's Senior Executive Program for State and Local Government Officials. He is a Senior Scholar at Harvard's Joint Center for Housing Studies where he leads a research effort on accessing capital for community development. Mr. Apgar also coordinates the Joint Center's research on home remodeling activity and writes the biannual report of the Center's Remodeling Futures Program. Active in community affairs, he is a founding member of the board of Preservation of Affordable Housing Inc., a nonprofit organization that acquires, rehabilitates, owns, and manages housing affordable to the nation's low- and moderate-income households.
