

City Limits » News » Housing and Development

Foreclosure Crisis Fades to Black and Brown

The crisis in the national housing market has slipped from the front pages. But in New York's neighborhoods of color, the twin crises of foreclosures and joblessness are still big stories.

By Catherine Dunn

Monday, Aug 15, 2011

Like Share 15 f 5 10 Email

Colin Lenton/City Limits
A house in Southeast Queens, epicenter of the foreclosure crisis in New York City.

Jamaica Center — One recent Saturday, 59-year-old Myrna Barnes walked into a Queens gymnasium full of homeowners in danger of foreclosure, looking for some advice about saving the home she had lived in since she was nine-years-old. The gym, on the York College campus, had been transformed into the grounds of a Home Rescue Fair. Ringing the sidelines and the baselines sat rows and rows of bank representatives working at laptops on folding tables, reps from Freddie Mae and Fannie Mac, and a small fleet of housing counselors and legal service providers. All around, distressed homeowners sat, watched, and waited their turn to meet with someone who could help them figure out what to do.

Barnes sat on a folding chair, waiting to meet with an advocate in the legal services area. "We're here to save our homes," she said. That day, Barnes was one of approximately 830 homeowners to attend the fair organized by the Center for New York City Neighborhoods (CNYCN), the city's de facto foreclosure response team. Like her, the overwhelming majority were people of color.

News Topics

Housing and Development

While the national foreclosure crisis that started in 2007 has receded in New York, it continues to rage throughout many predominantly black and Latino city neighborhoods. Despite a slight dip in the number of properties entering foreclosure citywide at the end of last year, "we still see, by historical standards, very elevated levels of foreclosure activity in predominantly nonwhite neighborhoods in 2010," says Josiah Madar, a research fellow at NYU's Furman Center for Real Estate and Urban Policy.

Foreclosure activity remains highly concentrated in southeast Queens, north-central Brooklyn, and the north shore of Staten Island. According to the Furman Center's State of the City 2010, last year more than 50 percent of properties that were acquired by the foreclosing lender were found in fewer than nine percent of the city's community

Search
Advanced Search | Archives | FAQ

Magazine Collection

July-August 2011

May-June 2011

TEKSERVE
Try our NEW online estimator find out how much you can save quickly
FOR ALL THINGS APPLE
TEKSERVE Apple Specialist

City Limits on Facebook
Like 1,417

Recent Activity

- Concerns Persist Over Child Welfare Cases Involving Mental Health - City Limits Magazine - CityLimi 26 people recommend this.
- A Crisis Beyond The Cuts: Help For New York's Seniors Ebbs - City Limits Magazine 22 people recommend this.
- Their Smoke, Our Smog: Meet These Midwestern Power Plants - City Limits Magazine 28 people recommend this.

Facebook social plugin

Join City Limits Mailin

 indicates required*

Email Address *

News and Investigations

News/Investigations (Weekly)
 The Brooklyn Bureau (Coming Soon)
 Special Announcements

Opportunities

Jobs and Career Opportunities
 Events and Conferences
 Business and Partnership Opportunities

Email Format

html
 text mobile

- Most Read Most Emailed New Jobs New Marketplace
1. Concerns Persist Over Child Welfare Cases Involving Mental Health
 2. Their Smoke, Our Smog: Meet These Midwestern Power Plants
 3. A Crisis Beyond The Cuts: Help For New York's Seniors Ebbs
 4. Foreclosure Crisis Fades to Black and Brown

NEWS COVERAGE

Arts and Culture
Education
Government
Health/Environment
Housing/Development
Justice
The Economy

Conversations Documentary
Video

Share

NEWSLETTERS

- News
- Career Bulletin
- Events
- Housing

EMAIL

MAGAZINE

Latest Issue
Subscribe
Renew
Customer Service
Digital Edition
Single Issues
Newsstands

RSS/Follow

RSS/Widgets
Twitter
iGoogle
NetVibes Page
Facebook
Youtube Channel

FEATURES

Event Calendar
Submit Event

Announcements
Post Announcement

News Network
Submit News

City Blogs
Submit A Blog

Multimedia
Submit Multimedia

To Subscribe or renew contact 1-877-231-7065 or visit Subscribe

JOBS + MARKETPLACE

Jobs
Post a Job Ad

Freelancers/Consultants
Post a Listing

City Spaces
Post a City Space

Affordable Housing Center
Post Housing

ADVERTISING

Advertising
Place A Banner Ad

CITY LIMITS

About Us
History
Staff
Contact Us
Commitment
FAQ
Support City Limits

MY CITY LIMITS

Join
Login

EMAIL

PASSWORD

Forgot your password ?
Click here »

Copyright © 2010

City Limits is a project of the Community Service Society of New York, which is a 501(c)3 organization.

Privacy Policy
CityLimits.org Credits